THE AGE OF ASYMMETRY PARADOX

New Generation Publishing, United States, 2007. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 204 x 124 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .When Professor Georges Anderla, as a consultant to the OECD in the early 1970s, asserted that the nascent knowledge industry would matter as much or more than manufacturing or energy, his peers labelled the metaphor an inflated rhetoric. Yet already, momentous developments were taking shape in which Anderla was to play a proactive part. First, the National Science Foundation of the US endorsed his forecasting study and implemented the project of information technology indicators, published annually. The European Commission then created a tailor-made directorate for information management. In that capacity, Anderla conceptualised - and negotiated the status of - a trans-European data transmission network, code-named Euronet, a forerunner of the US-sponsored Internet. Anderla fostered cognitive sciences, in particular, computer-aided translation, and galvanised the growth of a web of interactive databases, by so doing, prodding European researchers and policy-makers to face up to American and Japanese inventiveness and healthy competition. Throughout his career, Professor Anderla's interests and writings ranged widely, from international invisible payments to science policy and from computer strategies to the new discipline of chaotics applicable to corporations and society alike. A graduate of Columbia University (MA and PhD) and the universities of Paris, Prague and Aix-en-Provence, Anderla alternated between government service and teaching. Lately, Anderla undertook, somewhat in the spirit of the late Jacques Derrida's deconstruction philosophy, to re-examine in depth some key postulates and assumptions of modern geopolitics and the ups and downs of capitalism, as a prelude to setting forth a global agenda for developing low-income countries in businesslike partnerships with the West - a trail-blazing exercise through as yet unmapped 2000-plus world economics. Anthony Dunning trained as a mathematical...
